My legacy

STUDENT (of academics and of my parents!)!

Early Student Years

- I became a student by following my parent's example set forth for me. They are great role models and set a standard for morals, hard work, and excellence in life.
- As an actual student, from Kindergarten to 6th grade, I strived to get straight A's and go beyond what I thought possible. I value excellence in all things, and such value showed forth in the classroom.
- Growing up, and still today, I am passionate for my family, friends, showing kindness toward others, staying healthy, and working hard at all I do.
- My parents' leadership and love and my academic endeavors led me to become a part of the Connections Academy.

Connections Student

- While teaching at the Connections Academy, I have only grown more as a student. I learn from the individual students I teach—valuable lessons about caring for others, relaxing, and working hard whether reward and gratitude are seen or not. I see how lives are changed, and have learned to never stop trying to make a difference. And I learn new ideas to put into my teaching and my own character and personality, making me an even better person than before.

Lifelong Learner

- Learning is lifelong, and it expands far beyond the classroom—the classrooms I grew up learning in, and the ones I teach in today.
- In the near future, I plan to continue learning about how to develop curriculum even better for my new students.
- Not only this, but I will strive to learn how to be the best wife to my husband and more obedient child of God.
- I am far from perfect, but each day is a new day to learn from so many things—from mistakes, from things done well, and from others! And I will always continue to learn.
